

Jon's Reasons to use WordPress

The three reasons that I've switched to using WordPress are:

1. Unlimited features.
A website can be built exactly to fit the need.
2. Ownership.
The websites I build for others are owned by them. Their entire site can be downloaded and saved offsite and/or moved.
3. Learning and Build Plugins.
I can learn and make plugins that fit my needs as a developer and those I serve.

Below are some of my website projects and why WordPress was a good fit for them:

<https://ministryleadershipinstitute.com/>

We wanted a public and private websites with the same look and feel.
The private website has an online course for Mission Journeys participants.

<https://crosstrainministries.com/>

We wanted a public and private websites with the same look and feel.
The private website has specific features for members only. The primary feature is the video library of webinar recordings that is only available on the private website.

<https://shirleygreenleaf.com/>

We wanted a custom website for two churches with the same pastor, a special prayer request form, and a blog.

<https://communitycookiedecorating.org/>

We wanted a customized design with specific links and buttons.

<https://st-andrew-online.org/>

We wanted a custom website with the ability for visitors and members to search the library of sermon recordings (audio and video).

<https://westside-christian.org/>

We wanted a custom website with a similar look and feel as the church with lots of pages with custom menus.

<https://thescholellowship.com>

<https://schole-academy.com/>

These 3 homeschool groups are part of Classical Academic Press' Scholé Groups. Each website is built using the same WordPress template but customized for each group. Some of these sites also have a private side for members only.
